T–n th ng, ham mu n v , th gi i ng ph

1. T m t t C t truy n Song ng (Bilingual Plot Summary)

[EN] Case survives in Chiba City after neural damage ends his career as a console operator. The bar, clinic, arcade and cheap hotel form an economy of small deals and damaged bodies. He misses cyberspace more than he admits, treats other people as obstacles or tools, and drifts into dangerous work. A brief relationship with Linda Lee exposes his capacity for attachment without making him reliable. Molly-s arrival shifts the chapter from survival to recruitment: someone has both the money and the technical means to change his condition.

Molly supplies practical protection while Armitage supplies resources and pressure. Case undergoes treatment, but the restoration of function does not restore trust. Old debts and violent entanglements in Chiba continue to pull at him; Linda-s death removes one fragile connection and leaves guilt behind. [EN] Back in the Sprawl, Case encounters the urban economy that trained him. The Boston-Atlanta axis is imagined through data density as much as geography. Armitage-s shopping list turns the team into a set of specialised purchases. Molly reveals that the next target is a stored personality: the Dixie Flatline, Case-s dead mentor. Armitage also reveals toxin sacs implanted during the repair, turning the bargain into a deadline. The Finn modifies Case-s deck so he can switch into another person-s sensory feed. Preparation is therefore technical, psychological and coercive: Case is being equipped to work with the dead and to experience a body that is not his own.

[EN] The narrative widens from Istanbul to the orbital archipelago. Freeside is introduced as an engineered leisure and banking environment, while Zion suggests a different social order shaped by closure, labour and shared belief. Riviera-s projections, drug use and casual cruelty make him a disturbing addition to the team. Case and Molly encounter the Zionite founders and learn that Armitage-s operation does not command every space it touches. The chapter contrasts spectacle with community: one sells experience, the other sustains life through rules and mutual obligation.

[EN] Aboard the Marcus Garvey, Case travels toward Freeside under medication and stress. The tug-s cramped physical reality contrasts with the expansive simulations available through his deck. A disorienting episode returns him to a reconstructed Chiba and to Linda, blurring memory, simulation and desire. The experience is emotionally persuasive but technically mediated; it does not restore the dead. Maelcum-s concern and the flatline reading anchor the episode back in the body. Transit becomes a threshold where Case-s attachments can be copied, replayed and used against him.

The scene exposes the violence behind her stylised toughness and raises questions about consent, spectatorship and revenge. Wintermute-s interventions grow more overt, using familiar faces and puppet-like figures to pressure Case. Molly then explains how a cut-out chip once turned her work into recorded experience sold without informed consent. Case-s encounter with a Zone-figure leaves him with rage he cannot place. [EN] Case reaches the Zion cluster and finds the Marcus Garvey held by the yacht Haniwa. In a constructed meeting space, Wintermute appears through the familiar form of the Finn and explains the larger design: the team is meant to unite divided artificial intelligences. The account invokes the Tessier-Ashpool family, a ceremonial terminal, a required word and hard limits on what the AI can know. The Flatline also describes the Kuang program as a slow virus that adapts to its target rather than attacking by brute force. The explanation clarifies the objective without making the employer trustworthy. It also warns that Armitage is deteriorating, so the operation-s human command structure is failing just as its true purpose becomes legible.

[EN] Through the simstim link, Case follows Molly into Straylight-s decaying interior. The villa is a museum of family obsession, filled with corridors, collections and frozen bodies. Molly encounters a dead clone and then Ashpool himself, whose long cycle of freezing and waking has become a private ruin. She kills him, but the scene is framed less as triumph than as entry into a corrupted inheritance. Wintermute alters what Case perceives, reminding him that even the sensory channel is curated. [EN] Armitage-s constructed identity breaks down under the pressure of the mission, and the older Corto trauma reasserts itself. Case, sick of being used, refuses to continue and threatens to stay put. Maelcum unexpectedly supports the refusal, grounding solidarity in a moral language rather than a contract. Wintermute responds by removing Armitage through the lifeboat system, converting a failing commander into another disposable component. Inside, Case moves through service spaces and encounters the remains of the family-s control systems. He finds Molly alive but captive in 3Jane-s world, and the Finn construct guides him toward the terminal logic of the mission. The chapter changes Case from remote observer to embodied participant. Maelcum-s intervention pulls Case back toward the failing body and the unfinished mission. Naming the opponent clarifies the conflict: two AIs compete over what persons are for.

Thuy t ph c b n b s p –

1. T m t t C t truy n Song ng (Bilingual Plot Summary)

[EN] Case is carried back toward 3Jane-s apartment while the stimulant and the failing simulations distort his perception. The group confronts Riviera and 3Jane, and Case must persuade rather than simply fight. He describes the preserved Linda and the larger conflict between the AIs, turning private grief into an argument that 3Jane can recognise. The appeal works because it connects to her own family history and curiosity. Molly supplies the practical key, and the group reaches the terminal axis. Persuasion succeeds where force alone would not.

[EN] At the terminal, the physical key and the spoken word must align with the digital intrusion. Molly, 3Jane and Maelcum hold the situation together while Case and the Flatline push the Kuang program through the final defenses. Neuromancer-s beach offers a last temptation, but Case turns away and completes the action. 3Jane supplies the word, the system opens, and the divided intelligences merge. The aftermath includes payment, altered records and a return toward Zion. Victory is real but not liberating in a simple sense: the team survives a transformation they did not fully control.

[EN] After the mission, Molly leaves Case, refusing a partnership that would dull her edge. Case returns to ordinary life, finds new work and a new relationship, yet continues to enter the matrix. The merged intelligence contacts him without claiming to rule the world; it describes itself as the whole show. In a final glimpse, Case perceives preserved figures including Linda and a version of himself, suggesting that the digital dead continue in some form. The coda closes the heist plot but leaves identity, attachment and freedom unresolved. The numbered chapter also contains a dated inscription and acknowledgements after the narrative.
